

Serbian Minister of Mining and Energy Zorana Mihajlovic talked with Boaz Toporovski, head of the party's parliamentary group Yes Atid and vice president of the ruling coalition in the Israeli parliament about bilateral cooperation, especially on climate change and the green agenda, the competent ministry announced today.

"Our two peoples have a strong friendship and alliance. I believe that our political and economic cooperation can be even better. When it comes to the department I lead, the green agenda and the energy transition are our national goal, we have prepared an investment plan worth 17 billion euros and we are open for cooperation with Israeli companies," the minister said.

Toporovski said that there is a lot of potential for improving cooperation and relations, which have always been friendly, and added that Serbia can count on Israel's support. It was agreed at the meeting that they would work together to improve co-operation between Serbian and Israeli companies in the field of renewable energy and the green agenda, Nova reports.
